MY NAME. A Borrid Phantom Connected With It-

A Life's Sorrow. My father was an Englishman, with a good, plain, strong, English name, which no offe need be ashamed to beer. The love and reverence I bear my father's memory makes his name most dear to me; and yet it has connected with it a harrid phantom, which for years has never reased to haunt me. Let me explain. My father and mother are both dead. My only stater is married, leaving me the only representative of the family bearing the name on this side of the ocean. There are others of the name of whom I hear, although I have no acquaintance with them; but there lies the origin of the sunder that haunts my path. Do not think that it is linked with either, disgrace, or treachery. I nover heard of one bearing the name who had brought upon a to least stain or obloquy. I scarcely ever meet a stranger who does not know of some one of the name, and, strange fatality, that person always is a minister. A triffing thing to dwell upon until not think that it is linked with crime, disgrace, or ever present, but its like the tales I've heard of criminal execution by continual drops of water falling on the head; at first it seems a triffing thing, but the uninterrupted dropping excites mind and herves and causes intense suffering. The wretched victim feels a drop and waits with feverish excitement for the next. He knows 'will surely come longs for it, dreads it. Seconds seem hours. He torture will never mose. And then, with until beaumabed, drop seems to follow drop in swift succession, like showers of hot lead, until

Then came the last sad benumbed state when the intervening time is nothing and the question, with its attendant agony, is all I know or feel of what goes on account we. Let the other administration of the control of the and agony, is all a know or feet of what goes on around me. Let me give a sketch of my most miserable life. I passed my childhood in happy unconsciousness, latening to rippling brooks, whispering trees, and low monaling of the waves upon the beach. In an unhappy hour I was sent away from all those rustic scenes to gather knowledge in a neighboring town. Unkind fate sent at the same time to preside over a congregation in the town a man who bere my name. We both

Deluded fool: I thought 'twas accident, and smiled. I little knew the dreadful fate that I was doomed to have pursue me day by day. A noted man camethere, and we all wished to grasp his good left hand—his right had mouldered on a battie-field. He had scant time to more than give a sympathetic pressure of the hand and pass us by, and those to whom he speke particularly felt it to he high honor. I went up with smiling counte-nance to meet the fateful question. In his city was a Baptist minister of my name. Was I his daughter?

TRARS CAME TO MY EYES. and with a trembling negative I shrank from the room to avoid the eager girls, anxious to know what he had said to so affect me. At last my school days ended, and I went forth to mingle in new scenes; but now no respite came. There seemed to be ministers everywhere—Baptist, Methodists. Universalist, Catholic-in every town and hamlet in the county, who here my fateful name. I changed my residence, and it was worse than ever. A clergyman of that name had ministered to a flock there years before, and every one was sure I was his daughter, and one even went so far as to ask me where my poor dead father I had fundly mourned now was. The strain was terribl I returned to my childhood's home. There I won wander amid the trees, and kindly Nature wou restore me, for I was nearly craxed. I scarce touched the platform at the depot before I w greeted and made acquainted with a minister w claimed me as a relative because I bore his moer's name. I could not escape the horrid spec groping in the shadow of my name. It was the and I could find no rest, and so again

A Word to Those About to Travel. Journeys are proverbially fraught with dis-comfort. Peril to the health also is often super-added on route. This latter may arise from climatic added en route. This latter may arise from climatic influences, unwonted food and water, or abrupt transitions of temperature. It is extremely desir able, under such circumstances, to have with one a reliable medicinal safeguard. None is more de-serving, popular, and highly sauctioned than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Against the influences of malaria, the enervating effects of a tropic climate, or the tendency of a damp, uncertain one to develop rheumatism or other complaints, this medicinal agent is a genuine defense. Emigrants to malarious regions, mariners, commercial travelers, naval officers, railroad men, and tourists find in the Bitters a genial means of counteracting the influences prejudicial to health, to which they are most particularly exposed.
